When Music Turned to Sex-- And Changed the World

Sexy young people singing about love to other young people

They were impossibly young, tremendously gifted, and very, very attractive.

Diana Ross was 20. Mick Jagger was 21. Brian Wilson was 22. Marvin Gaye was 25. The biggest star on stage, Lesley Gore, wasn't old enough to drink or vote.

It was October 29, 1964, at the Santa Monica Civic Auditorium. It was the T.A.M.I. show, and for two hours the heavens opened. The gods of the future poured out, strolled among us, and created magic effortlessly. After almost half a century the show has been released on DVD. You must see it. Stop reading this, go buy it or order it on Netflix, and then come back here. I'll wait.

The show opens innocently enough, with a long, silly song about the acts ahead. There's lots of surfin' shtick-America was just discovering California.

Out come hosts Jan & Dean, boys in matching polo shirts. They introduce "the guy who started it all back in 1958," and everything changes. Here strides Chuck Berry-38 (oldest performer on the bill), coal-black, legs apart, lascivious grin. After just a few bars about Maybelline, Johnny B Goode, Nadine, and a few other characters, the whole audience (99% white, 97% girls) is jumping, screaming, and shaking. Sweet Little Sixteen, he's leering about you.

In succession, we see the people who defined music for a generation (or two or three or four). White and black, male and female, everyone gets a few songs. And we get the gift of generously long, extreme close-ups, something concert videos no longer provide.

We see raw talent on the verge of ripening, kids who know their future is to be adored by the world. Their confidence is astonishing. They are already cultural hurricanes, and they know it.

Here's what else stands out: every song is about sex, love (including the agonies of infidelity), or both. And so is everything else about the show: the go-go dancers, in high-cut shimmy dresses and low-cut bikinis, shaking everything; the guys' pants, so tight you can tell who's circumcised. At some point almost every performer has a wink, a coy turn of the head, a dropped shoulder, a seductive sigh. These aren't the first sexy singers and sexy songs. But these are kids singing to kids. That's news.

Before then, songs were about many things, including love. When teenagers started making records for teenagers, popular music stopped being about anything but love-and sex soon followed. Only 48 months after T.A.M.I., Janis Joplin, Jimi Hendrix, Jim Morrison, and others went from "Baby Love" to "Back Door Man," from "Judy's Turn to Cry" to "Are You Experienced?"

The Rolling Stones close the show. Jagger is already rubber-lipped, pouting, demanding, already bending bar lines and chords as if obeying a slightly different scale and rhythm than the rest of us.

But the show has already climaxed with the second-oldest guy on the bill-James Brown. He's a force of nature, frenetically dancing in ways white people have never seen. He's sweating, shouting, grunting, dropping to his knees, doing the splits. It's so personal, so intimate, we almost have to look away. It's so powerful we absolutely can't. James is making love to everyone in the audience, to his band, to the girls on stage, to the lights, to the camera. When he's done, helped off with a cape around his shoulders, we are both exhausted and energized. We're coming down from the group orgasm.

Watching this show, you can feel the universe turn. The music, the erotic new dancing and fashions that came with it, the consciousness experiments it predicted...well, if you were around just a few years later you know exactly what happened (assuming, as they say, that you remember it).

Naughty America Trades Porn for Gift Cards

Naughty America knows what you wanted for the holidays—porn—and knows you probably didn't get it.

So, to ease disappointed giftees, the production company is offering memberships to its scores of online sites in exchange for unused and unwanted gift cards.

Those in possession of Starbucks, Target, Best Buy, Adidas, Cabela's, Petco and Walmart giftcards (to name just a few eligible swappables), can opt to exchange their plastic for porno.

Naughty America's SFW site breaks down the exchange rate simply: $15 card = 16-day membership, $40 card = 43-day membership, and $100 card = 344-day membership.

"Nothing says America like the freedom of choice," Naughty America founder Andreas Hronopoulos said. "This is a great deal for the holidays. Instead of using a gift card for a $5 coffee, you're getting porn subscription."

According to the site, the exchange is completely anonymous and only an email is required to make the transaction.

Music That Enhances Sex

When it comes to sex, you need to make sure you set the scene for the session. And what better way to do so than by using music to enhance the sexual experience?

The kind of music you opt for is entirely up to you, but most guys (and women) will agree that death metal is out of the question. So, depending on the kind of sex you’d like to have, choose your music accordingly.

But rather than opt for an album by a single artist, I recommend opting for compilation albums — i.e. soundtracks and what have you. For now, here are some suggestions you might want to keep in mind the next time you happen into a music store.

R&B

The great thing about R&B music is that it usually comes with lyrics, so if there’s something you want to tell her without actually saying it, you can say it with song. And if not, then let the men and women of this genre help you seduce her.

My suggestions:

Tha Down Low

Let’s Get It On

If you like to chill out and go through various speeds and tempos while doing the deed, then this music will serve to give you and your girl exactly what you’re looking for. This music, along with a good bottle of wine, can turn your session into something hypnotic.

My suggestions:

Cafe Del Mar Volumen Once

Paris Under A Groove - Stylistique Vol. 1

to some dance, ethnic and jazz music...

Dance

Considering you’re doing your own horizontal dance, listening to some soft, original dance music will serve to make her sway her hips more so on your penis. Personally, I think this is the best kind of music to have sex to.

My suggestions:

Beautiful Tomorrow - Blue Six

Nude Tempo 1 - Muguel Migs

Penetrate Deeper \(Reis\) - Deep Dish

Addictive Beats - Saeed & Palash

Ethnic

If you’re the type of guy (or couple, rather) who enjoys trying out new things every so often, why not put on some bellydancing beats or soft Greek rhythms and let her show you what she’s made of? If the music makes her feel sexy, she will proceed to show you exactly how sexy. Not to mention, penetration will definitely feel a little spicier. You can always start out the foreplay by dancing together and then you can, oops!, accidentally end up inside her.

My suggestions:

Immortal Egypt - Phil Thornton, Hossam Ramzy

Buddha Bar VI

Jazz

If you’re in the mood to take things slowly up the foreplay department and move into penetration with ease, then jazz is the kind of music you might want to try out.

My suggestion:

Better Sex Video Series: Indulgence - Sensual Rhythms

Verve Remixed

Nova

If there’s one kind of music that can get any woman in the mood, it’s bossa nova. The Brazilian voices and eclectic music will leave any woman feeling happy and perhaps horny, and she’ll be enjoying her orgasm in no time. As will you.

My suggestions:

Bossa Nova For Lovers

play that funky music

And there you have it; enough music to keep you sexually satisfied for at least a couple of months. Remember that although music can enhance sex and all its surrounding activities, you should try to adapt the beat to whatever you’re doing with your girl. What I like to do is turn the volume up to make a woman comfortable enough to moan a little louder. Add some lighting and take your time, and before you know it, your woman will start turning on the stereo to give you the hint.

Until next time, let the beat take over.

HBO to Remake French Porn Comedy with ‘Sex and the City’ Writer

“Sex and the City” alum Jenny Bicks has signed on to adapt the French comedy “Hard” for HBO and Fox 21.

Stephen McPherson is shepherding the comedy with Bicks. He optioned the rights to the Canal Plus series from producer Gilles Galud.

Dark comedy revolves around a Brentwood housewife who inherits her husband’s failing porn company. She’s challenged to manage a business and her dueling lives, which she shares with her coffee-clatch friends.

Vin Di Bona, exec producer of “America’s Funniest Home Videos,” suggested the property was ripe for U.S. adaptation after McPherson, the former ABC Entertainment chief, hung out his producing shingle last spring.

“Hard” is in the early stage of development at HBO. Bicks, McPherson and Di Bona’s Fishbowl Worldwide Media are exec producers. Fishbowl’s senior VP Shaleen Desai is handling the project for the company.

Bicks, who was a key scribe on “Sex and the City,” previously worked with McPherson during his tenure at ABC when she spearheaded the Anne Heche dramedy “Men in Trees.” That show had a two-season run from 2006-08. Bicks fell for the “Hard” concept when McPherson pitched it to her over breakfast at Soho House.

Most recently, Bicks was showrunner of Showtime’s “The Big C.” At present, she’s also writing a pilot for NBC and is exec producing with scribes Lizzie and Wendy Molyneux a comedy pilot, “Works With Jerks,” for ABC.

The original “Hard” (pictured) starred Natacha Lindinger in the lead role. The series made a splash when it bowed in 2008; a follow-up season ran in 2011. McPherson had no trouble checking out the original segs. He spent his elementary and high school years in France.

Study: Honesty, Mutual Porn Use Leads to Couples' Satisfaction

A new study published in the Journal of Sex and Marital Therapy suggests that honesty regarding porn consumption and mutual use are predictors of increased relationship satisfaction in heterosexual couples.

The team of Canadian researchers, led by Kevin Alderson and Marley Resch, recruited 340 female participants aged 18-41 from a university in western Canada, who were in committed relationships with men who admitted to using porn.

The women completed various questionnaires online to assess their personal porn use, “distress level” with respect to porn, whether or not the women perceived that their partners were honest about pornography use and overall relationship satisfaction.

Findings revealed that women who perceived that their partners were honest about their porn use reported higher levels of relationship satisfaction and lower levels of distress, Scientific American reported.

Mutual use of porn was linked to lower levels of distress, but had no significant impact on relationship satisfaction.

“Being honest about pornography use with a partner indicates that the person is comfortable with their own sexuality and the things that sexually titillate, stimulate, arouse and turn-on their excitement,” Dr. Fran Walfish, psychotherapist and author, told MedicalDaily regarding the study.

She commented further, “When both partners are equally open sexually and emotionally pornography can be an exciting, wonderful foreplay. Often, watching can stimulate ideas, themes and scenarios that can illicit spontaneity and adventure for the couple.”

BARKIN' OUT LOUD

It never pays to get too cocky as a sports enthusiast, den dweller or pen shaker either one.

Last week snaring three of four in the prognostication department kind of went to my head. While I continually remind myself to be objective, grilled food and iced beer have a tendency to throw me off track. That's what happened when I forecasted this week's games.

I don't know how ya'll did but I was dressed down to a fifty percent victory margin. Not a bust but not a shelf setter either. Given the vagaries of the NFL during any action I'm surprised that I've fared this well so far.

Let's examine these outcomes.

Saturdays picks were the Saints and Colts. Both lost in discouraging fashion, which, I guess, is one of many ways to lose. I prefer the losses to be in close exciting games with plenty of top offense and defense and promoting much yelling and screaming and calls for more suds. I don't know about the players but I've always walked away from those games feeling better than those discouraging let downs.

Prime example were the years with the Cowboys and the now infamous triplets (Aikman, Smith, and Irvin), while they were building up to their Super Bowl runs. Each year they'd get better and the losses more exciting than discouraging. You could actually FEEL the team getting better (fans are highly sensitive that way). Same way with the Dallas Stars in the years building up to their Stanley Cup victory.

But these Saints and Colts didn't do that for us. Nope. But they did it in slightly different styles.

The Colts are still very young and QB Luck is just finishing up his sophomore season, and they have won on the road in outdoor stadiums. New Orleans just dumbled down. Again. Or once again. Or still.

The Saints, and QB Brees, solidified their reputation that they can't win on the road in open air stadiums.

Both played in the cold and rain on sloppy fields. The Saints ran into the loudest outdoor stadium in the NFL, while the Colts had the Patriots run over them with human tanks.

Last week the Saints Brees finally, that's FINALLY, pulled off an outdoor victory, against the Eagles, barely, but there was no carry over to this week. Luck and the Colts have plenty of room to get better. Can you say that about Brees and the Saints?

On Sunday you'll recall that I picked the 49ers and Broncos. Both these teams were not being ballyhooed and I was used as a human dart board for choosing them. While the Colts and Saints picks probably had a wee bit of hope attached to them, these two I felt were the solids for the weekend.

Why? While the two defenses were top tier, I don't think the Panthers QB Newton is anything but average at this point, and after three years this is a disappointment. The 49ers Kaepernick and Seattle's Wilson and Indy's Luck are much further along in just their second years. The overreliance on the screen plays tells you Newton's not near ready to play upstairs.

Common sense says Carolina needs to add some quality receivers, but I've made that same comment for the last three years. And even if they do so, the question remains as to whether he can be coached up to the next level of mentally getting the game.

The Chargers, to me, weren't the Cinderella team being touted up, that was mostly hyperbole being tossed out by media wanting to make themselves look good. They had to rely more on the passing game and that was their downfall. Yeah, Rivers in my book ain't no Brady or Rodgers.

The reason this game was as close as it was had more to do with familiarity, they're division rivals, than expertly thought out game plans. The Chargers only were as close as they were because of their defense, which was eventually worn down.

NFL Conference Championships

Both games on Sunday January 19

2pm CST

Patriots at Broncos.

Both these teams are not the healthiest and not without problems. Both have arrived here due to outstanding quarterbacking and coaching. Both are going to require mistake free ball to survive.

The Broncos have Manning and a much better receiving corps. Denver's offense is disciplined, regimented, and deliberate. The Patriots have Brady and the better defense, and a devilish wizard in Coach Belichick.

Denver tried to deliver a more balanced attack against the Chargers and RB Moreno has given them that boost. With the defense just losing starting corner Chris Harris, the offense will have to maintain control of the ball.

New England's been forced to have a balanced attack due to the loss of receivers, their top two are Edelman and Amendola. They play a ground attack of running back by committee with Ridley, Vereen, and Blount.

The story for both these teams will be written by the offensive lines. If either, or both, can control the line and allow the running games to be established, that's where this fight will be won or lost. So who becomes important? The linebackers.

When Brady had Wes Welker on his team he made a living going inside the seams, and now he plays inside the numbers. Manning has had an overall tendency to play outside the numbers but that's because he has more talented receivers than Brady. Welker now plays for Manning, Brady has Edelman.

Right now Denver's secondary is the more vulnerable because of Harris being out, and that's the cut and dried of it. Denver's got the edge with receivers and the Patriots have the edge with the defense.

This game's a pick.

5:30pm CST

49ers at Seahawks.

I think this will be the rougher of the two games. Both teams know each other from the coaches on down, and that's a carryover from University play to now. Most of the same coaching support staffs.

49ers Harbaugh has the tough guy rep, but he's just louder. If you've paid any attention at all, you'll notice that the Seahawks Carroll has built a nasty defense that lives on blood like Blade lives on vampires.

Does the 49ers QB Kaepernick have a weakness? Yes, he has a tendency to throw the long ball with a little too much air so it slows and comes down a bit early. What about the Seahawks QB Wilson? Yes, as the Saints defense showed, he isn't that comfortable in the pocket game under pressure so they'll protect him with the run.

With two young QB's, even though each has achieved very good success early, both are going to be given game plans that are run first. Seattle has Lynch, fast and shifty, and the 49ers have Gore, a bulldozer. Both have power and both can carry a pile.

If you ever wanted to see the real rock and a hard place, this is the game. Both running games are rugged and both defenses are brutal. A double thick mouth piece kind of game.

This one's a pick, too.

Readers Response:

Two Dogs:

I think A-Rod their making the scapegoat for baseball. A years suspension is ridiculous for what everybody's doing. How longs it gonna be until they make that stuff legal like Colarado and Washington did?

Mace – Atlanta

Mace:

About as long as it'll take you to comprehend ethics and fair play. Here, let me give you a clue, never.

TD

Two Dogs:

When Sanchez came to the Jets he made starting QB and his first two years they went to the AFC Conference Championship games, after that they've not made the post season since. Do you see that happening with Wilson, Kaepernick, and Luck?

Chuck – Mesquite

Chuck:

Maybe, but not for the same reasons. With Kaepernick and Wilson, they're in the same division with the Cardinals and Rams, both teams that are coming on strong and could be in place next year to cut the legs out from both the 49ers and Seahawks. Luck is surrounded by a very good coaching staff and personnel department that's shown they're aggressive about bettering the team. The trade with the Browns for Richardson hasn't worked out, or at least so far, but they want that running game improved. Sanchez was saddled by an organization that began taking the team apart and bringing in very questionable players. He got a deal so raw his cheeks will be chaffed for life.

TD

Two Dogs:

I dig what you keep saying about Romo not being able to make the players around him better, like Brady does. How does Jones sleep at night when he sees how teams like the 49ers and Seahawks and Colts have developed their teams? And how Belichick and Brady just take what they've got on hand and make it work? Jones and Romo can't.

Beans – Oshkosh

Beans:

Jones is making a huge, that's HUGE push to get two more games added to the post-season, his belief is that more average teams can then get in, like his. He sleeps well by avoiding the organizations issues and creating illogical ones for the league.

TD

Two Dogs:

Why would Manziel forego his last two years of college? I know he claims to be "all about the money" but his advisors should be telling him how necessary that education is to being a successful NFL QB and then later in life. Being an NFL QB is one of a few rarefied jobs that demand iron level mental strength, with the ability to do real time processing, understand complex plans and situations, unwavering focus, and physical skills and talent. Right now he only has some of these. A lot of these guys want to be shown the money, but most of them either don't know what it takes or lack what it takes and won't do what it takes.

Parker – Houston

Parker:

I agree with everything you've said.

TD

Two Dogs:

Do you think there's a team that'll grab Johnny Football? Can he be successful?

Gary – Peoria

Gary:

There are teams out there that need QBs and need to fill the seats. Like the Jags, Browns, Vikings, Raiders, maybe your Texans, and if the Titans give up on Locker. Oh, yeah, and the owners that'll do stuff like that. Under the right circumstances, like if he's coachable and will work, he could probably have some success. He does too much scrambling, usually the result of coverage. Notice what happened to RGIII?

TD

Two Dogs:

Why is it so hard for these baseball voters to not cast ballots for cheaters and drug users? They don't want to offend the hand that feeds sort of thing?

Xiang – Austin

Xiang:

There's a tendency amongst people who are ill prepared to start throwing questions out that make people feel there is a conundrum and makes it look like they're very intelligencia minded for doing so. The reality is, in cases like voting for players who've used banned substances, they simply do not know the difference between right and wrong and what's legal, or by the rules, and what's not. While it's all glamorous and exciting for sports writers to be voting, the reality is they shouldn't be. If MLB would erase all the statistics of those who've used banned substances that would be a big step toward cleaning up the game. But baseball won't because they don't have the stones or commitment to the game.

TD

Two Dogs:

These rebuilt Stars are doing the same thing as the teams from the last several years have done, that's not defend and not know how to close out a game. Looks like the "Red Wing" makeover is a dud. How does this keep happening?

Marty – Dallas

Marty:

You're saying what a lot of others around Dallas are raising their voices over. Some feel this team can't move forward until all the remaining players from before are gone. Others believe Gaglardi and Nil have a plan and Ruff can carry it out. Dallas wants a winner again so bad they are having a hard time being patient and they see the Stars hockey as being the game to bring glory back. Like I said before, this is going to be a developmental year and to be patient, and I stick with it. You should, too.

TD

Two Dogs:

Is Dalton the answer for the Bengals? He fell apart the last few games and then in the first round. Is Lewis's time as coach past? Luck's doing better and he's only got two years in and Dalton three.

Len – Cincinnati

Len:

Dalton's under more unfavorable scrutiny than the Colts Luck, but both threw interceptions that cost them in the playoffs. Dalton does appear to be lagging behind Luck in developing. How Lewis is still the Bengals coach is beyond me. With their offensive coordinator off to take over the Redskins maybe they can score a new QB coach and coordinator that'll know how to bring him up. Without that, he's got a year or two left and done.

Colorado: Retail Marijuana Sales Now Underway

NORML
NEWS OF THE WEEK

“Colorado is the first, but it certainly won’t be the last, state to treat cannabis as a legal, adult retail product”

Denver, CO: Dozens of state and locally licensed cannabis retailers opened for business on Wednesday, engaging in thousands of retail transactions with customers age 21 and older.

The sales are in compliance with newly enacted state regulations allowing for the commercial production and retail sale of cannabis to adults. In past weeks, state regulators have approved over 300 businesses to engage in marijuana commerce. Several dozens of those enterprises opened their doors on Wednesday while dozens more are expected to begin operating within the coming weeks.

NORML Executive Director Allen St. Pierre called the day’s events “historic.” He said: “For the first time in modern history, a state is regulating cannabis as a legal commodity in a manner similar to alcohol. Colorado is the first, but it certainly won’t be the last, state to treat cannabis as a legal, adult retail product rather than as a prohibited, criminalized substance. The genie is out of the bottle and it isn’t going back in.”

Under Colorado law, adults may legally possess and grow limited quantities of cannabis. Licensed commercial retailers may also cultivate, produce, and sell cannabis and cannabis-infused products. Local municipalities, in addition to state regulators, must sign off on the operation of marijuana businesses. Fifty-five percent of state voters in November 2012 approved ballot language authorizing adults to possess, grow, and commercially sell cannabis.

In August, Deputy Attorney General James Cole issued a three-page memorandum affirming that the Justice Department would not interfere in the state’s efforts to regulate cannabis sales, provided that those regulations limit the substance’s availability to children and do not allow for the diversion of cannabis to states that have not legalized its use.

In-state residents may purchase up to one ounce of cannabis. Out-of-state customers are limited to purchasing no more than one-quarter ounce of cannabis per retail transaction. Retail cannabis sales are subject to state sales tax in addition to a cannabis-specific 25 percent ‘sin’ tax. Transactions involving the purchase of medicinal cannabis by state-qualified patients are not subject to similar taxation. Public consumption of cannabis is subject to a civil fine.

Further details on existing Colorado laws and regulations specific to cannabis industry practices are available online from the Colorado Department of Revenue here: <http://www.colorado.gov/cs/Satellite/Rev-MMJ/CBON/1251592984795>.

Similar regulations governing state-licensed cannabis production and sales are anticipated to begin in Washington in coming months.

For more information, please contact Allen St. Pierre, NORML Executive Director, or Erik Altieri, NORML Communications Director, at (202) 483-5500.

A man is in a hotel lobby. He wants to ask the clerk a question. As he turns to go to the front desk, he accidentally bumps into a woman beside him and as he does, his elbow goes into her breast. They are both quite startled.

The man turns to her and says, "Ma'am, if your heart is as soft as your breast, I know you'll forgive me. She replies, "If your penis is as hard as your elbow, I'm in room 436."

OOOOOOOOOOOPS!!!!

MORAL OF STORY: “PLEASE READ INSTRUCTION MANUAL BEFORE TAKEOFF”.

This “brand-spanking new” Airbus 340-600, the largest passenger airplane ever built, sits just outside its hangar in Toulouse , France ... without a single hour of air time.

Enter the Arab flight crew of Abu Dhabi. Aircraft Technologies (ADAT) to conduct pre-delivery tests on the ground, such as engine run-ups, prior to delivery to Etihad Airways in Abu Dhabi. The ADAT crew taxied the A340-600 to the run-up area. Then they took all four engines to takeoff power with a virtually empty aircraft. Not having read the run-up manuals, they had no clue just how light an empty A340-600 really is.

The takeoff warning horn was blaring away in the cockpit because they had All 4 engines at full power. The aircraft computers thought they were trying to take off, but it had not been configured properly (flaps/slats, etc..) Then one of the ADAT crew decided to pull the circuit breaker on the Ground Proximity Sensor to silence the alarm. This fools the aircraft into thinking it is in the air. The computers automatically released all the brakes and set the aircraft rocketing forward.

The ADAT crew had no idea that this is a safety feature so that pilots can’t land with the brakes on. Not one member of the seven-man Arab crew was smart enough to throttle back the engines from their max power setting, so the $200 million brand-new aircraft crashed into a blast barrier, totaling it. The extent of injuries to the crew is unknown due to the news blackout in the major media in France and elsewhere, becauseCoverage of the story was deemed insulting to Muslim Arabs. Finally, the photos are starting to leak out.

One French Airbus: $200 million dollars
Untrained Arab Flight Crew: $300,000 Yearly Salary
Unread Operating Manual: $300

Miss Nude World 50th Anniversary Gallery II

By: Ms. Misha Morê

The first Miss Nude World International Pageant was held in upstate New York in 1964 and comedienne and jazz singer Samantha Jones was the first winner. There were eleven contestants and it was then called “Miss Ecdysiast World.” As the contest continued, more girls entered and were recognized as the best in their field. There were magazines on board early in the pageants, then movies made, HBO pay-per-view and finally charity events to show solidarity for human and earth causes.

There have been many memorable moments among them in 1990, the customer participation contests were added to the pageants, affording the men in the audience a chance to be on stage a physical part of the fun. In Houston in 1995, one of the male customer participants had a special pair of bikini underpants made that lit up and said “Vote For Me”! The Pageant has had contestants win from all over the world. There have been anxious moments, when, at the last minute there have been ties... and the ties must be broken.

This is the biggest Miss Nude World to date, not only is it the 50th year of the pageant, but over twenty of the world’s most beautiful and talented adult entertainers competed for the milestone title. Also this year, there were several entertainers that competed for the title of Newcomer of the Year.

All the contestants did an excellent job and performed with extravagant costumes and props. Aspen Reign, Justice Vancouver, Ashlyn Marie, Cali Rose, Chula, Destiny B Wilde, Holly Hart, Jenna Jaden, Kordella Kosor, Madison Ivy Love, Puerto Rican Princess Zuma-Mariani, Rebecca Cleo, Stephany Stalls were the names of the competitors and 2013 Miss Nude World Winner Cassandra Jane performed her signature numbers.

A huge thank you goes out to Rio Rivers, Foxxxy Ladyz GM, Steve, and staff, all sponsors and crew, Zeek, Branden, and Joshua who constantly kept the mainstage cleaned and well maintained during each performances and competition.

The Top Winners:

Champion: Aspen Reign

First Runner Up: Justice Vancouver

Second Runner Up: Madison Ivy Love

Newcomer of the Year:

Champion: Cali Rose

First Runner Up: Chula

Second Runner Up: Ashlyn Marie

Triple Threat: FDA Should Ban These 3 Things...Now!

Some of America's favorite foods are laced with super-bad ingredients and compounds found at levels concerning many scientists and health experts. But with the Food and Drug Administration's (FDA's) recent announcement that will lead to an eventual ban trans fats, one of the most potent heart disease promoters in the food supply, will the agency take initiative on these prominent food threats, too?

Excessive Acrylamide

Discovered only 11 years ago in certain foods, acrylamide is a powerful carcinogen created naturally when starchy, carb-rich foods are cooked at temperatures above 248 degrees Fahrenheit. (Even coffee contains acrylamide.) Baking crackers and potatoes, frying up french fries and chips, toasting bread, and even manufacturing cereal all create acrylamide, the result of sugars and the amino acid asparagine forming in many fried, roasted, and baked starchy foods.

In 2010, the Joint Food and Agriculture Organization and World Health Organization Expert Committee on Food Additives labeled acrylamide as a legitimate human health concern. And although the FDA recently issued guidance on how the food industry could curb acrylamide buildup in cereals and snack foods, organizations like the Center for Science in the Public Interest want the agency to take it a step further, actually setting a limit on acrylamide in food.

Avoid It: Avoid processed, starchy foods as much as possible. When making homemade fried potatoes, potato chips, or mashed potatoes, use this soaking secret: Before cooking, soak the raw, sliced potatoes in water for 2 hours before frying to reduce acrylamide by nearly 50 percent; if you're rushed, a 30-second rinse of sliced spuds reduces acrylamide by more than 20 percent. Or you can microwave the potatoes for 30 seconds before cooking, which slashes levels of acrylamide by 60 percent. Bonus tip? Since storing potatoes in the refrigerator can result in increased acrylamide during cooking, keep your spuds out of the fridge and instead store them in a dark, cool place, such as a closet or pantry, which prevents sprouting.

When toasting bread, stick to a light toast. Going darker increases acrylamide levels. But hey, you may find that giving up bread offers some other health perks, too.

Antibiotics

We are in the midst of a crisis, entering into an era in which the common antibiotics we rely on to keep people alive will no longer work. In fact, The Lancet medical journal just published an alarming report highlighting that the miracle drugs of the 20th century are on the verge of collapsing. The article didn't mince words, either—it began with "A crisis looms."

And in fact, today, many bacteria can withstand all drugs that doctors throw at them. Why is this happening? "Despite warnings...that resistance would be a problem, antibiotics have been used with great profligacy—prescribed pointlessly for viral infections, added to animal feed to boost growth of livestock, and handed out like cough sweets in the community," The Lancet piece outlines.

A whopping 80 percent of antibiotics used in the United States go into animal feed for nonorganically raised farm animals, a practice that fattens the animals up faster and gets them to market sooner. Factory-farmed animals raised for meat—the kind sold in most supermarkets in the U.S.—swallow most of the nearly 30 million pounds of antibiotics used in farming a year. This results in the creation of hard-to-kill supergerms, including those found on supermarket meat. Although high-profile medical associations and public-health industry groups have lobbied hard to ban chronic feeding of low-dose antibiotics to farm animals, the FDA has yet to ban the dangerous practice.

Avoid It: Choose meat, eggs, and dairy raised without the use of antibiotics. Organic bans the use of antibiotics, but you may also find a local farmer who doesn't use antibiotics in your area. Animal Welfare approved and Certified Humane products only allow short-term antibiotics if an animal is truly sick and needs it.

Arsenic

The FDA made an uncharacteristically bold move by withdrawing three arsenic-based feed additives from the market. These arsenic-laced animal feeds are used in most poultry feeds. If you're asking yourself, wait, why would chicken and turkey growers use a carcinogen in feed in the first place, here's why: Like antibiotics, there's something about the toxic metal that seems to speed animal growth. Unfortunately, recent testing detected arsenic in supermarket poultry, too. There's still some work to do...FDA is still allowing a fourth arsenic-based additive, meaning it's potentially still in the food supply.

Even with arsenic seemingly on its way out in animal feed, it's still a problem in other foods. Rice is really good at pulling arsenic out of soil and into the part of the plant that people eat. Because of that, the metal has been detected in rice and rice products like brown rice syrup sweeteners and some baby cereals. Public-health advocacy groups like the Center for Food Safety are pressuring the FDA to create a cumulative arsenic exposure guideline so people can better figure out if they're reaching dangerous arsenic levels based on their entire diet, not just on a food-by-food basis. After all, the heavy metal—a neurotoxic brain damager—has also been detected in apple juice, seafood, and infant formulas. Children, infants, and fetuses are most at risk because their brains are still developing during this critical time.

"Consumers are likely to be exposed to arsenic from multiple sources, such as rice, water, and chicken; therefore strict regulation of cumulative exposure is vital to protecting public health and is already standard practice in other areas of food regulation," says Paige Tomaselli, senior attorney for Center for Food Safety.

Avoid It: Environmental Working Group researchers recommend the following methods to lower your arsenic exposure in food:

- Choose brown rice, and rinse it well when preparing it. Rinsing your brown rice with water can lower its arsenic levels by 30 to 40 percent. (White rice doesn't hold up to cooking when rinsed well, unfortunately.) Try working alternative grains like quinoa into the mix at meals, too.
- Limit products listing rice syrup as a sweetener. This natural sweetener could contain higher levels of arsenic due to the grain's natural ability to absorb the compound.
- Instead of rice cereal as baby's first solid food, try sweet potatoes, squash, bananas, and avocados For older children and adults, opt for real oatmeal or mixed-grain cereals.
- Limit certain fruit juices to a maximum of ½ to 1 cup a day. Why? Orchards used to use arsenic as a pesticide, and it lurks in the ground decades later.
